

Communications

Sakai is an open source community with a variety of active interest groups and communication channels. Most groups are open for anyone to join and welcome new members. In fact, many of our community working groups have email lists and channels for news and discussion about their respective areas. If you are looking for ways to get involved, or learn more about the Sakai community, signing up for one or more lists is a great way to start.

We encourage you to subscribe to our Google group email lists to interact with community members, learn from one another, and share your knowledge.

We also have an Apero Slack account with a variety of open chat channels that you can join. Slack is a great way to ask a quick question or get help and feedback in real time.

See the links below for more information on how to connect.
