

Teaching With Sakai Webinar Series (Planning)

The Idea

At the 2011 Sakai Conference, there was substantial interest in establishing a monthly, live, synchronous, online course (or project site) demonstration by faculty at different Sakai institutions. The intent is to provide examples to interested community members and to highlight the wonderful wealth of resources in our Sakai community! This can be an exciting professional development opportunity for all of us -- and your participation is essential to our collective success.

- Goal: Host one presentation per month beginning in September 2011 - May 2012 -- and represent a variety of institution types, disciplines, and countries.

Requirements

- Identify a faculty member at your institution who would be willing to demonstrate some aspect of his/her course that works well, has learning impact
- Is willing to be recorded during the session
- Can do 15-20 minutes of show & tell online (perhaps screen shots to reduce some of the technical glitches that will inevitably ensue) followed by facilitated Q&A
- Recorded & made available online for later viewing

Learning through reflective writing and immersion with social media

Bobby White (UC-Berkeley) is teaching a 10 week professional development seminar for faculty focused on the history and origins of new media. The primary learning goals for her class are to:

- develop a greater understanding of the cross-disciplinary foundations of new media
- be able to utilize social media in supporting students to facilitate their own learning

This webinar will focus on how Bobby is using blogs and the Sakai Open Academic Environment (OAE) to meet these goals through reflections on readings, sharing ideas, and online discussion.

Details and registration information coming soon!

The Details to Address

- What synchronous web conferencing tool will we use? Should the host institution select?
- How many people can attend synchronously?
- Where will the recordings be stored and in what format? Tags? Etc.?
- What about time zones?
